Awards, Data Journalism Featured at Three European Conferences

Lots of activity this past weekend by our colleagues in northern Europe. Two of the largest and oldest investigative journalism associations held their annual conferences in Norway and Sweden, while the German association held a state-of-the-art data journalism conference. In Tønsberg, Norway, more than 600 journalists gathered for the annual conference of SKUP, the Stiftelsen [...]

O CONGRESSO

O que é o congresso Internacional de Jornalismo Investigativo?

Realizado anualmente desde 2005 pela Abraji, o congresso reúne jornalistas, estudantes e professores de jornalismo interessados nas melhores práticas jornalísticas e técnicas de reportagem. O 6º congresso reforça a parceria da Abraji com a Universidade Anhembi Morumbi, que já sediou o evento duas vezes, em 2009 e 2010.

Entre os palestrantes deste ano estão alguns dos mais experientes jornalistas brasileiros e mais de dez convidados internacionais.

A sexta edição do evento é organizada em palestras e workshops simultâneos, concentrados em um

Challenges

- Changing financial model
- Changing technology
- Violent assaults
- Legal harassment
- Compromised owners
- Lack of access, public records
- Scarce resources
- Lack of standards
- Lack of training
- Uneven development (law enf., judiciary, legislative, civil society, media)

Making an impact...

- Global spread to Brazil, China, India, and more
- Recognition that IJ needed for development, civil society, and anti-corruption.
- Business leaders rank investigative journalism as best single tool to fight corruption – more effective than anti-bribery laws, civil society initiatives, and due diligence by business.

Is Investigative Reporting in ICU?

By: SHEILA CORONEL | February 1, 2013

Hit by the twin blows of economic crisis and collapsing business models, newspapers and TV stations eliminated or downsized their investigative units. Yet at the same time, the muckraking spirit remains alive.

SCOOP Celebrates 10 Years

By: SCOOP STAFF | January 24, 2013

Longtime GIJN member SCOOP, based in Denmark, is a cross-border network of investigative journalists who help fund projects, connect reporters for collaboration, and organize conferences and trainings. On SCOOP's 10th anniversary, our colleagues there put together an impressive list of activities, awards, and events, which we're reprinting here in full. Continue Reading →

Los Angeles, CA - March 15th, 2011 -- The Investigative News Network (INN) announced today the hire of Richard Robinson, an accomplished designer and programmer, as its first Director of Technology. In addition, the Network has unveiled a dynamic new Web site that showcases the more than 100 stories that INN member organizations produce every day.

Prior to joining INN, Robinson previously worked at Mail.com Media Corporation as Senior Manager of Product & Design, where he oversaw digital product development across a portfolio of news brands. Before that, Robinson was responsible for product development at TheWrap.com...

TRANSPORTE URBANO: La debacle subsidiada

Mientras el sistema de transporte urbano de la ciudad capital de Guatemala se hunde entre la ruina y la violencia, dos asociaciones de transportistas se enfrentan por la distribución del millonario subsidio que otorga el Estado. Estado que, a pesar de las acusaciones de malversaciones millonarias, se niega a fiscalizar el destino de los fondos designados para promover un sistema de transporte digno.

Syria: the story behind one of the most shocking images of the war

Why did the bodies of 110 men suddenly wash up in the river running through Aleppo city six weeks ago? A Guardian investigation found out

Martin Chulov with photographs and video by Ben Salomons and Noah Payne-Frank
The Guardian, Monday 11 March 2013

Discovery

It is already one of the defining images of the Syrian civil war: a line of bodies at neatly spaced intervals lying on a river bed in the heart of Syria's second city Aleppo. All 110 victims have been shot in the head, their hands bound with plastic ties behind their back. Their brutal execution only became apparent when the winter high waters of the Qued river, which courses through the no man's land between the opposition-held east of the city and the regime-held west, subsided in January.

The grate over the Qued river in southern Aleppo, which locals have placed hoping to catch the bodies that flow downstream

Victims

Just after dawn on 29 January, a car pulled up outside a school being used as a rebel base in the Aleppo suburb of Bustan al-Qasr with news of the massacre. Since then a painstaking task to identify the victims and establish how they died has been inching forwards. The victims, many without names, were mostly buried within three days — 48 hours longer than social custom dictates, to allow for their families to claim them.

Ever since, relatives have been arriving to identify the dead from photographs taken by the rescuers. Each family member who has made the journey to a makeshift office, set up inside a childcare centre, brings with them accounts of when they last saw their father, son, cousin, or brother and where he had travelled before he was murdered.

There are no women on the grisly slideshow of dead men that is replayed in melancholy slow motion every time a relative arrives. Nor are there more than a handful of males aged over 30. Most of the dead dragged from Aleppo's Qued River were men of working age.

Another thread strongly unites the fate of the river massacre victims: each of them had either been in the west of the city, or had been trying to get there. They had to pass through checkpoints run by the Syrian army, or their proxy militia, the Shaolins. The process involved handing over identification papers that detailed in which area of the city the holder of the papers lived.

In mid-February, the Guardian interviewed 11 family members of massacre victims in the Bustan al-Qasr area, who all confirmed that their dead relatives had vanished in regime

Members of Parliament: Honorable or Accountable ?

Members of Parliament (MP) generally refer to each other as 'honorable member'. It is widely held tradition in the Commonwealth Countries. However, the findings of CIRP investigation into their 2011 taxes call into question their right to be called as 'honorable member'. According to Article 77 of the Constitution of Pakistan, the Parliament is the only institution authorized to impose taxes for the Federation. However, the lawmakers who levy taxes have exhibited unimpressive record of leading by example when it comes to paying taxes.

Taxes of PM and Cabinet

Former PM Yousaf Raza Gillani and his 25 cabinet members had acknowledged in the nomination papers for the February 2008 general elections that they did not pay a penny as income tax. Gillani even registered for NTN in 2010 when he was 52-year old, one-and-half-year before quitting the PM office after his conviction by the Supreme Court. The analysis of 2011 tax records shows further non-compliance by the cabinet members.

Highest and Lowest Taxpayers in the Senate

We have shown top five and bottom five tax-paying Senators. Aitzaz Ahsan is the top taxpayer. His 2011 tax details have been gathered from his nomination papers as he was elected in March 2012. However, the FBR's electronic database that records the names of e-filers did not have his data. Mushahid Hussain Sayed leads in the bottom five taxpaying Senators' list who filed returns. Since he was also elected in March 2012, his nomination papers were examined wherein he claims Rs. 582 as income tax but the amount reflected in FBR's database shows Rs 82.

'Honorable' MNAs and Their Auditable Taxes

In the National Assembly, there are 341 MNAs against the sanctioned strength of 342 as one seat is vacant. Those who paid income tax constitutes 26% of the entire lot as 90 MNAs did so and 235 (69%) did not. The nomination papers of 16 MNAs (5%) were either not available from ECP or the details like NTN and CNIC numbers essential for determining tax status from the FBR database were incorrectly mentioned. They couldn't be examined, therefore.

Incubator shortage in Egypt hospitals kills 100,000 infants a year

Report

Submitted by Maha al-Bahnasawi and Daren Ferghaly on October 4th, 2012

+ Increase - Decrease Normal

Report by Maha al-Bahnasawi and Daren Ferghaly

Al-Watan

Popular sayings attest to how dearly Egyptians cherish their children. But in Egypt, 100,000 infants are dying each year due to a chronic shortage of neonatal incubators in units caring for prematurely-born or under-grown babies.

Al-Watan has traced the tragic experiences of several families whose joy at the arrival of a newborn quickly turned to grief because the infant could not be saved due to the unavailability of incubators in government hospitals. This investigative report found that the problem does not stop there. It is compounded by the serial violation of regulations in neonatal units, a severe shortage of qualified nurses to staff them, and a longstanding legacy of administrative neglect.

TeliaSonera in milliondollar deal with dictatorship

Swedish Telco TeliaSonera has paid out hundreds of millions of dollars to a young Uzbek woman in exchange for telecom licenses in Uzbekistan, according to Mission: Investigate, the Swedish public television current affairs program. The report discloses that the woman is very close to the Uzbek dictator's daughter Gulnara Karimova, and is also the focus of a major money laundering investigation recently launched by Swiss authorities. Swiss investigators have already frozen large assets suspected of belonging to Karimova.

This past spring Mission: Investigate disclosed how TeliaSonera secretly cooperated with the security services in one of the world's most repressive countries.

MACAPAIMA, Venezuela | Wed Sep 26, 2012 7:16am EDT

(Reuters) - The site of what may someday be Venezuela's first newsprint factory today consists of little more than a warehouse, several acres of cleared tropical savannah, and two billboards bearing pictures of President Hugo Chavez.

More than five years after Chavez first hailed state-owned Pulpa y Papel CA as a vanguard "socialist business," there is little else to show here in rural southeastern Venezuela for the more than half a billion dollars that state investment fund Fonden set aside for the project.

As with many Fonden investments, tracking the money sent to Pulpaca, as the project is known, is difficult. A Pulpaca annual report for 2011 said the project was stalled for lack of funding. A manager at the dusty gates of the compound declined to comment. So did contractors involved. Requests for interviews with the industry ministry, charged with disbursing Fonden money for such projects, went unanswered.

Fonden is the largest of a handful of secretive funds that out decisions on how to spend tens of
